Built at a cost of £6.4m, Diageo's Innovation and Research Centre in Menstrie, Scotland, is set to play a leading role in the future sustainability of the beverage industry.

The new state-of-the-art laboratory builds on Diageo's extensive footprint in Clackmannashire and houses the firm's scientific and technological research teams.

Staff in any business require a breakout space and for this multi-million-pound, project, we were asked to provide free-standing acoustic screens to add a little bit of privacy in these social areas.

Whisper is a fantastic product. Made from 65% recycled plastic bottle flake, it's so much more than traditional acoustic panels; it's an environmentally friendly design medium that can be used to produce a variety of workspace solutions.

Knowing this, Anchorpoint Interiors approached us about the possibility of creating series of privacy screens to be dotted around Diageo's breakout zone.

Utilising our standard 'Abstract' pattern as a base, we manufactured several acoustic folding screens to be placed in key positions to provide both audial and visual privacy for Diageo's staff.

And as Whisper is a lightweight material, these freestanding screens can be moved with ease, allowing the breakout space to be reconfigured to meet the changing needs of its users.
